Social Security Disability and Work: Myth & Facts

Myth: Once I get onto Social Security disability benefits, I can’t work.
Fact: This is not true. One of the Social Security Administration’s highest priorities is to support the efforts of beneficiaries who want to work by developing policies and services to help them reach their employment goal. The Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) programs include a number of employment support provisions commonly referred to as work incentives.

Myth: I will lose my health insurance (Medicare or Medicaid) if I go to work even part-time.
Fact: Medicare will continue for at least 8 years and 3 months after you begin working, and it can go even longer. With Freedom to Work Medicaid you can have unlimited earned income and up to $75,000 in assets plus your house, one car and retirement funds.

Myth: Because I have SSI, if I get a job I will wind up with less money every month.
Fact: The Social Security Administration counts less than half of an individual’s wages when figuring cash payments in the SSI program. So recipients always have more money overall each month if they work.

Myth: I have to keep my earnings under $1,070 a month or I will lose my Social Security ($1800 a month if I am blind).
Fact: SSDI beneficiaries can continue to receive benefits during the Trial Work Period and Extended Period of Eligibility, and can also use work incentives -- such as Impairment Related Work Expenses and Subsidies -- to earn over $1,070 per month while keeping their countable earnings to under $1,070 per month.

If you receive SSI or SSDI benefits and have questions about returning to work, call our WIPA Certified Work Incentives Counselor Hank Bostic at (269) 345-1516.
